Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from British and Foreign Medico-Chirurgical Review, Vol. 36 And what is this Hygiene that we should exalt it, or that we should fear it? It is indeed Civilization's better part. Much there is in it of that mystery that attaches to our race; the counters that it plays with are not merely human lives; crowns and sceptres are under the influence of its sway; the balance of European power, the British constitution itself, may bend to its strong appeal: for with a step like that of the ghostly statue in the play, amid the clang of international and jars of political discord, Civilization irresistibly advances - strong by its alliances, attractive in its sympathies, pulsating under the pressure of ancient and domestic thrall, yet sworn in fealty to no soil, it spreads and pierces by a law of life; and come what will, it must go on. There is no longer any let to this must; and as it establishes itself it will call for barriers against disease. The interpretation of individual independence - incompatibility of state institutions - will all ultimately prove plastic, or rend under the application of its force. A perception of the laws of life will end in a cry for the preservation of human lives as loud mayhap as ever was the cry for liberty. Hygiene must finally be accepted as the imperative duty and privilege of the State, as its use comes to be cherished more and more by each individual man. The march of these facts might have been retarded for some years had not society possessed in its soldiers a special field for observation whence to draw...
