Having an opportunity of seeing one of the younger boys under discipline, I learned the secret of the governing power. Harry! look me in the eye! look me in the eye! was the authoritative command; and not until the boy lifted his face and met his father s gaze, was the word of admonition given. And there was no mincing matters. The governing power was where it belonged; the censure was deserved; the mother s silence was an additional reproof, and obstinacy was in subjection. In governing the boy, it too frequently happens that father and mother do not pull together, and perhaps that is one reason why this mode of training struck me as being rather novel and peculiar; and as we judge entirely by results, four well-behaved, gentlemanly, agreeable boys are certainly sufficient proof that, in the case above cited, the...
