Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Green Gate: A Romance The train was rushing through one of the many tunnels on the road across the Apennines from Bologna to Florence. In a second-class carriage the flame of the dim oil lamp in the roof was just dying out. It flashed up fitfully now and then, as if to look after matters in the carriage; and at each revival a fat, middle-aged Italian woman, leaning back against the black cushions in a corner, opened her sleepy eyes, only to close them immediately. By her sat a puny little man, the end of a eiger held loosely between the fingers of the hand that hung down at his side, his hat upon the back of his head, - evidently, judging from the tone of the conversation lately carried on between himself and the lady, her husband. In another corner crouched a Frenchman, his knees drawn up almost to his chin, his feet eased in embroidered slippers; the travelling-bag hanging above him proclaimed him a commercial traveller. The third corner was occupied by...
